STREETCAR SERVICE IN COLUMBUS, GEORGIA

By

John R. Lassiter

The city of Columbus, Georgia, was shaped from the wilderness and grew into a thriving community at a time in American history when emphasis was placed on the development of a suitable means of transportation for passengers and freight between inland frontier towns. Steamboats plied their way up and down the Chattahoochee River between Columbus and Apalachicola, Florida soon after the city's founding in 1828. By the late 1850s railroad lines had connected Columbus with other cities and the need for transportation in the area was being satisfied by road, the river, and railroads.

After the War Between the States had taken its toll on the nation and the city of Columbus, a period of rebuilding began that can truthfully be called the age of "reconstruction." The end of the war also brought about a greater awareness of the need for some form of public transportation. Partial realization of the transportation problem came with the granting of a charter by the Georgia state general assembly on March 9, 1866 to the Columbus Street Railroad Company.¹ Names on the act as incorporators were: J. G. Bowers, W. M. Moses, J. R. Ivey, W. W. Garrard, R. B. Murdock, and W. R. Turmire.² Coming as it did on the heels of the Civil War and at the beginning of reconstruction, it is not surprising that the street railway business in Columbus did not turn out to be as profitable a venture as originally anticipated. This being the case, the charter was not put into use at that time.³

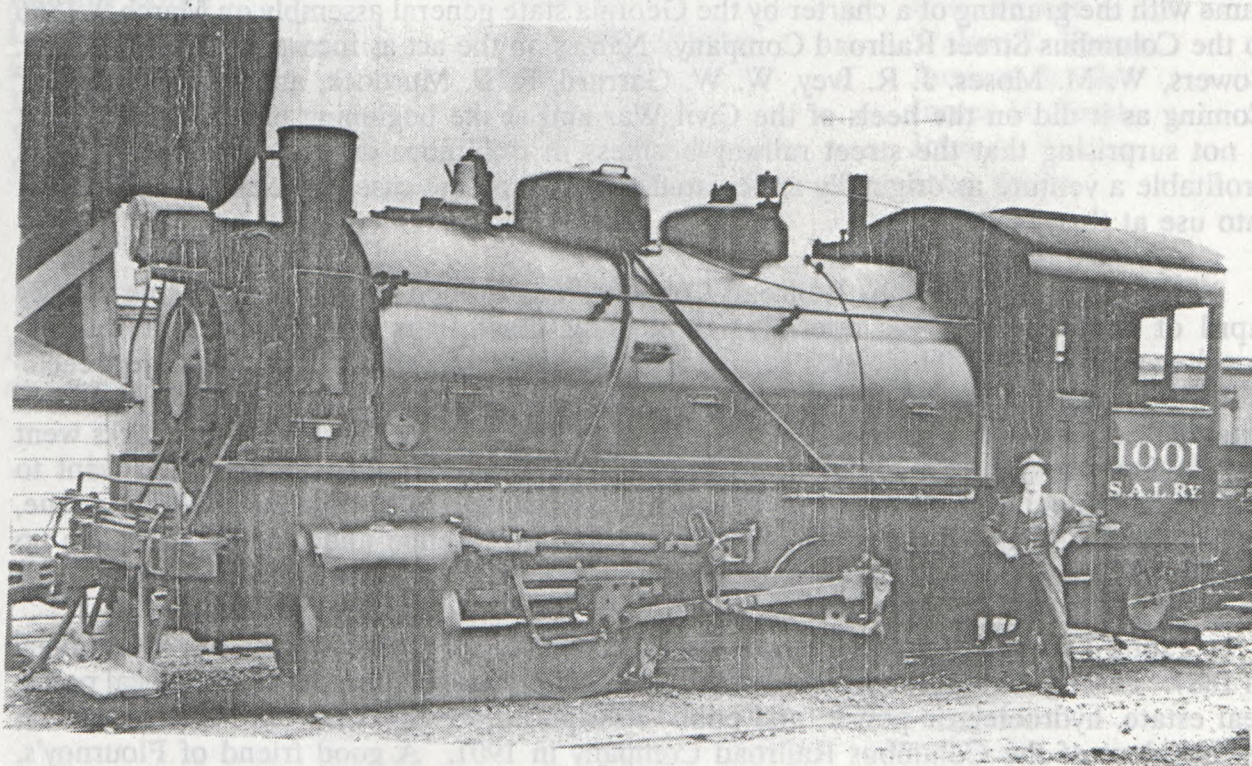

In 1883 the Columbus Railroad Company was formed using the 1866 charter. By April of 1884 the line was operating three mule-drawn cars on two miles of track in downtown Columbus. These cars carried a burdensome load of fourteen passengers each.⁴ Cliff B. Grimes was the first president of the company.⁵ Two years later, the lines had been extended to follow Broad from 7th Street to 14th Street. From 7th Street the tracks went east to 6th Avenue then south to 6th Street. At Broad and 12th Street a line went to Union Station at 6th Avenue. From Broad and 14th Street tracks went east to 2nd Avenue, up 2nd Avenue to 17th Street, down 17th passing 3rd Avenue and crossing 4th, then up the hill via Hamilton Avenue to Rose Hill.⁶

John Francis Flournoy took over as president of the Columbus Railroad Company in 1887. Throughout his life he would figure prominently in the development of local parks, real estate, hydroelectric power, and public transportation especially until his resignation as president of the Columbus Railroad Company in 1901. A good friend of Flournoy's, Louis Ford Garrard, became a member of the railroad company's board of directors in 1887. Both were born in Wynnton in 1847 and attended school in the one room brick schoolhouse that is now the library of Wynnton Elementary School. Both attended the University of Alabama and there enlisted in the Confederate Army. During the war the two would be assigned to the same unit, Nelson's Rangers.⁷ In 1888, a year after the Flournoy take over, the best remembered of all Columbus trolley lines was established.

MUSCOGIANA, VOL. 2, NOS. 1 & 2

This was the "Belt Line." In addition to being known as the Belt Line, the route was often called the "Wynnton Circuit", and for many years was a source of transportation to and from Wildwood Park. The seven mile Wynnton loop took approximately forty-five minutes to cover during the time that a steam "dummy" was used as the means of motive power.⁸

The dummy locomotives were about twenty feet in length and were 0-4-0 type engines (no front wheels, four in the center, and none behind the drive wheels). They were wood burning initially, using pine about three feet in length, and had no tender as did standard steam railroad locomotives. After a number of Wynnton residents complained about the smoke from the dummy, coke was substituted for pine and used from then on because of its smokeless nature. The passenger dummies, unlike the ones for freight, were enclosed in a cab so horses in town would not be frightened. This being the case, the appearance of the belt line engine would be somewhat like that of a wooden box car with a few modifications. The passenger dummies were named "Wildwood" and "John Hill". When established, the belt line was the only line that was not horse-drawn.⁹

STREETCARS

Service began at 6:00 a.m. and continued until 10:30 p.m., normal equipment being the dummy and one to three cars. For special events such as parties, dances, or picnics, the line would put on additional cars and run later into the evening. The cars were thirty feet long and carried from forty to fifty passengers. For five cents a person could travel the whole belt line, and if they so desired, with a conductor in every car, could get off anywhere they wished. To do this the conductor would pull a cord three times, ringing a bell in the engine, and the train would stop.¹⁰ Two trains ran at the same time on the belt line, one from Broad through East Highlands to Wildwood Park, the other out 10th Street up Wynnton Road to Wildwood. They would switch at Wildwood and also at 10th Street and Broad.¹¹

The freight and passenger dummies were both of standard gauge (four feet eight and one half inches) and because of the unusually sharp curves along the route, wheel arrangement was thus dictated to a small number, so the engine could turn easily. The area that these engines serviced was Front Street, Bay Street, and Broad Street, the tracks on Broad being used to deliver freight to merchants on the west side of the street. In 1900 these freight lines were leased by the Seaboard Air Line Railway for a period of fifty years.¹² It was also hoped that the railroad would purchase the Alabama Warehouse, owned by the Columbus Railroad Company, and then use it as a depot. In 1902 the railroad built a new brick structure for that purpose on Front Avenue.¹³ Soon after the leasing Wildwood and John Hill, in addition to freight engine # 1001, were scrapped. Another engine, #1003, was used prior to the arrival of a new 1001 in 1932. In that year a representative of the Baldwin Locomotive Works came to Columbus and inspected the trackage the engine would use. A new oil-burning # 1001 was the result.¹⁴

During the 1880s cities throughout the country were electrifying businesses, homes, and streetcars. Electrical power saw its first commercial use in Columbus at this time also. The first streetcar system in the country to operate by electricity came about in 1886 in Montgomery, Alabama.¹⁵ At the regular monthly meeting of the Columbus city council on the evening of November 5, 1890 a petition was received from the Columbus Railroad Company for permission to electrify its lines. The permission was granted.¹⁶

Slightly more than a month later, on December 24, 1890, the state legislature granted a charter to E. J. Rankin, J. B. Holt, T. F. Smith, R. A. Carson, D. P. Dozier, Rhodes Brown, and Samuel A. Carter, forming a new streetcar company in Columbus, the North Highlands Electric Railroad Company.¹⁷ This competitor to Flournoy had been organized with $50,000 in capital and was authorized by its franchise to operate within a five mile radius of the center of Columbus.¹⁸ In 1892 the first electrified line was put into use, the North Highlands line. This was a proud moment for the citizens of Columbus, especially for those reaping the most benefit, the people of North Highlands and Bibb City. The line owned three cars and extended from the North Highlands casino (the site is presently occupied by Comer Auditorium) down 2nd Avenue to 11th Street, where it made a turn and ended at the bell tower on Broad Street.¹⁹

There was much speculation as to when the lines of the Columbus Railroad Company would be electrified. In two years the problem was solved when the North Highlands Electric Railroad Company was absorbed by the Columbus Railroad Company.²⁰ Prior to the actual consolidation of the Columbus and North Highlands companies, a certain amount of competitive aggressiveness existed that at times was expressed through fights among employees of the two companies. This hostility led a minority of Columbusites to believe that such a merger was not possible. The majority, however, agreed with the predictions of the Enquirer-Sun, that consolidation was imminent, and in the best interests of the city and its citizens.²¹

On the morning of November 22, 1894, the consolidation was made official. Up to this time officials of both companies had been unwilling to disclose any information. The silence imposed on the press and public created a want for information, and when the morning of the 22nd came, the press was there also. Representatives of the North Highlands Railroad Company were: S. A. Carter (president, and brother-in-law of W. C. Bradley), Rhodes Brown, and E. J. Rankin. The Columbus Railroad Company was represented by J. F. Flournoy and L. F. Garrard, as attorney.²²

The terms of the merger were simple. For $25,000 cash all bonds of the North Highlands Company were turned over to Flournoy, giving control and ownership of all track, right of way, and equipment to the Columbus Railroad Company. With reorganization the North Highlands Company also saw a change in presidency, from S. A. Carter to John F. Flournoy. Although the property of the Columbus Railroad Company, the North Highlands line continued to operate under the same name. Three weeks prior, the consolidation had actually been made legal with members of the company holding a majority of the Columbus stock, the Drake and Stratton Company.²³

In an Enquirer-Sun interview Mr. Flournoy stated: "...the lion and the lamb will now lie down together...." Obviously, he was referring to the turmoil between the two companies. At that time, the main emphasis of the consolidation was the benefits reaped from it for the benefit of Columbus. Plans put forth included the connection of the Rose Hill line and the North Highlands line at 2nd Avenue and 17th Street, a new line connecting Broad at 15th Street and 2nd Avenue, and the use of heavier rail to upgrade the track between 15th and 17th Streets because of expected heavy use. The next day crews were put to work connecting the 10th and 12th Street lines along 5th Avenue. The idea of establishing a transfer station was also expressed. It was envisioned that no one would have to walk more than one block in any direction to catch a streetcar.²⁴

Other events took place in 1894 that were important to the street car lines. On November 9th an agreement was reached between the Columbus Railroad Company and City Mills by which a power station would be built at the dam. Early in 1894 stock was issued to fund the City Mills dam project. In this issue the Drake and Stratton Company bought most of the stock and thus established their controlling interest. The railroad agreed to pay $4000 a year for this privilege and also not to sell the power to any competitor of City Mills. This station was the first hydroelectric power plant in Columbus.

STREETCARS

Soon after the North Highlands merger, the steam powered electric generating plant used to power the cars of the North Highlands Company was moved to the car barn and used as an additional power source for streetcars throughout the entire city.²⁵

In relating the year 1895 to Columbus history one can express it best as "the year of the streetcar." The projected use of all electric cars throughout the city was an event much looked forward to by Columbusites. Four new electric streetcars were displayed on the Broad Street dummy siding between 10th and 11th Streets on the 11th of January. They were objects of great excitement to the people passing by. Six more new cars were soon expected. On the same day one of the new cars was tried out on the Rose Hill line and found to be in excellent working order.²⁶

Two days prior to the beginning of city wide service a charter was granted to the Columbus Railroad Company by way of the Drake and Stratton Company for the construction of an electric streetcar line across the 14th Street bridge. The line would extend to the foot of Summerville Hill, with an additional line going out Crawford Road to the Chattahoochee Brewing Company. A line in lower Girard was being considered, but nothing was decided at that time.²⁷

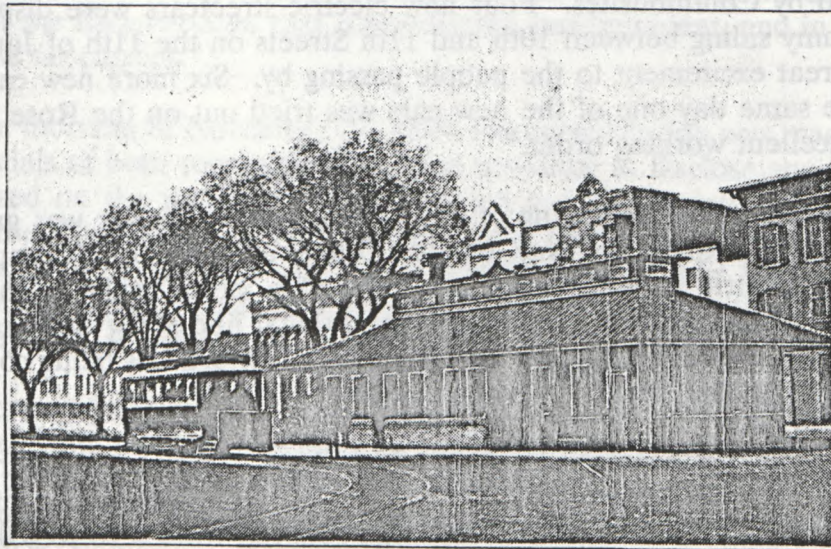

At 7 o'clock on the morning of January 25th, 1895, electric street cars made their first trip on Broad Street, inaugurating city wide service.²⁸ In anticipation of this, and to perhaps draw more riders, streetcar fare had been reduced from $.10 to $.05 on all cars after 9:00 p.m.²⁹

As late as the previous Thursday night, workers were still in the process of hanging wire and laying track. At that time the original North Highlands line was altered with the addition of a switch at the intersection of 2nd Avenue and 15th Street. In stead of following 2nd Avenue to 11th Street and then right to the bell tower, the cars followed 2nd to 15th, turned down 15th, and then out Broad Street. This first trip down Broad "... attracted as much attention as a passing circus procession." On the same day a car was placed in service on 12th Street connecting Union Station with downtown.³⁰

The owners of the Columbus Railroad Company and the people of Columbus were anxious to see the entire city under the service of the new electric cars, but not patiently anxious, as was evident by the work being down as the new cars were put into service. On lower Broad wire was still being hung on the 25th, the line only running as far as the Rankin House on the corner of Broad and 10th Street. Tracks were to be laid on all streets from 5th to 15th except for 9th, which was occupied by the tracks of the Mobile and Girard Railroad. The Enquirer summed up the view of many Columbus citizens during this period, "... when the system is completed it will be the finest in the south."³¹

A well known Columbus landmark emblematic of the turn of the century and dear in the minds of many people was built in 1895; this was the transfer station. Upon the request of John Flournoy, Alderman John P. Turner made a motion that the station be located at Broad Street and 10th Street.³² Columbus city council reviewed the plans and the proposed site, granting a petition for that location.³³ The council heartily endorsed this endeavor, obviously thinking of the many advantages Columbus, its citizens, and businesses would gain by the completion of such a project. No objections were voiced, and the arrangements for construction were put into motion.³⁴

THE COLUMBUS TRANSFER STATION AS IT APPEARED IN 1895.

Extra capital from the sale of stock in 1894 funded the construction of the transfer station as well as the car barn.³⁵ According to the cornerstone, G. E. Young and Company were the contractors.³⁶ The building they constructed was one story and fashioned from red brick. The waiting rooms of the transfer station were lighted and furnished, as well as being heated in the winter and cooled in the summer by electric fans.³⁷ Completion and initial use of the station came in May 1895.³⁸ Sometime in the period of 1908-1910 Stone and Webster (the eventual owners of the company) added a second floor to the station and used it as office space. Further growth then forced officials to find additional space across the street in the Garrard building, resulting in the second floor being expanded space for public use.³⁹

On the morning of April 26th, 1895, electric cars made their first trip around Wildwood Park. There were several mishaps the day of that first running, including a freight train running into the main wire at City Mills.⁴⁰ The upgrading in service by the establishment of the electric cars came as a relief to some more than others. Since the establishment of the belt line in 1888, children from in town often used it as their way to attend the Wynnton school and efforts were made to comfort the parents of such children: "...parents whose children come on the Dummy Line may rest assured that they will be fully protected. A teacher will be on the 8:30 AM and 3:30 PM train, and pupils will be considered under his charge from the time they enter until they leave the car."⁴¹

The annual stockholders meeting for 1895 was held on May 20th and the following were elected to the board of directors: J. F. Flournoy; L. F. Garrard; F. D. Peabody; O. B. Grimes; H. H. Epping, Jr.; J. H. Drake, of Philadelphia; and J. Wainwright, of Pittsburgh. The following officers were then elected: J. F. Flournoy, president; J. H. Drake, vice-president; W. S. Drake, treasurer; O. B. Grimes, secretary; J. H. Henderson, superintendent; and Louis F. Garrard, attorney. At this meeting it was decided that the Phenix City routes would be established as agreed upon in January and that there would be no electrical lines crossing the 14th Street bridge. Instead, connection would be made by horse-drawn cars. There were hopes of a new steel bridge, but the company decided to go with the city's offer of using the current wooden structure. Work was expected to begin immediately.⁴²

After plans had been made to cross the bridge, the bridge committee of city council decided that it would be wise and in good order to conduct a feasibility study of the project. Council had previously refused to allocate the money necessary to repair the structure, and it was thought that the matter had simply died out. Two members of the committee measured a streetcar, then the bridge, and subsequently found that there was insufficient space for both a streetcar and another vehicle to occupy the bridge at the same time. The committee thus decided to recommend to council that the grant of extension to the Columbus Railroad Company be revoked.⁴³

The grant was revoked and streetcars never crossed the 14th Street bridge. This structure was partially washed away by flood on February 27th, 1902, and in 1903 the structure was finally replaced by one of steel, thus ushering in the use of electricity for streetcars across the river.⁴⁴ In 1922 the present structure was built by the Hardaway Contracting Company, complete with streetcar tracks.⁴⁵

By 1897 the Columbus Railroad Company had nineteen cars in operation, eleven open and eight closed. They could each carry approximately forty people and were twenty eight feet in length. In addition to Wildwood Park, the company owned and operated lines going to two other parks, North Highlands Park in North Highlands, and Lincoln Park. Lincoln Park was the local park for blacks and was located about two miles from the terminus of the Rose Hill line. All lines were constructed of fifty-six pound T rail mounted on standard railroad ties above ground, much resembling conventional railroad track.⁴⁶ Because of the increased demand made by the extension of lines under electrical service, two additional turbines were installed by the Drake and Stratton Company at City Mills and were in service by March of 1897.⁴⁷

With the turn of century there also came a change in control of the Columbus Railroad Company. Controlling interest was transferred from the Drake and Stratton Company to Stone and Webster Electrical Association in June 1901. At that time George

J. Baldwin took over as president, moving John Flournoy to the position of vice president.⁴⁸ As an entrepreneur, Baldwin established and cultivated many businesses around the country. Born in Savannah, Georgia, he was part of the business world at an early age and by the beginning of World War I had achieved a national reputation for his dealings. In 1889 Stone and Webster began as a firm of consulting engineers with Baldwin's association beginning in 1898. By the year 1906, Baldwin had acquired and was managing streetcar lines and related interests in Columbus as well as in Jacksonville, Florida and Houston, Texas. The city of Columbus benefitted greatly under Baldwin. He was instrumental in the building of Goat Rock and Bartlett's Ferry dams, and strongly encouraged the development of industrial schools in the city.⁴⁹

Baldwin soon discovered that in the company's years of operation up to 1900, enough money had not been earned to pay back interest on debts to the Drake and Stratton Company or to pay a dividend on stock. Electrification had failed to increase receipts. His explanation for this was the large population of low wage mill workers in and around Columbus.⁵⁰ Slightly more than one month after the Baldwin takeover city council provided for the separation of races on streetcars.⁵¹

During the early 1900s, service provided to electrical customers in Columbus proved itself unreliable due to the constant fluctuation in the flow of the river. Streetcars in town often ran at half speed and lights throughout the city flickered at times, when in use. The Columbus Railroad Company made an attempt to remedy this with the addition of a new boiler and generator at the car barn steam plant. This addition doubled the output of the plant, and most importantly, provided auxiliary power that was free of the river's influence. For years Baldwin had been annoyed with the unpredictable power, so much so that he worked quite heavily in lobbying with Stone and Webster for the necessary capital to construct a dam that would control the flow of the river. The result was Goat Rock Dam in 1910.⁵²

In 1902 Baldwin acquired the Gas Light Company of Columbus. The Columbus Electric Company was formed at that time to administer it and another acquisition, the Chattahoochee Falls Company. Four years later, in 1906, the Coweta Power Company and the Chattahoochee Falls Company were merged to form the Columbus Power Company. This action put both it and the Columbus Railroad Company under the same management. The Columbus Power Company in 1907 decided to build a new steam plant slightly northeast of City Mills. In June 1911 this plant was in operation and in 1914 all electrical railway generating equipment was moved from City Mills to this plant. Another Stone and Webster interest, the Columbus Electric Company, was merged in May 1922 with the Columbus Railroad Company and the Columbus Power Company to form the Columbus Electric and Power Company. On January 30, 1930 the assets of this company were finally transferred to the Georgia Power Company.⁵³

The demise of the streetcar system in Columbus was a gradual process over a period of time in which the automobile and the bus were being developed and refined. The first indication of such a movement came on September 4th, 1924, when the Columbus

Transportation Company was formed by the Georgia Power Company for the purpose of providing bus service to Phenix City.⁵⁴

Buses first replaced streetcars in Columbus on the belt line on August 23, 1925. By this time the old belt line was considered to be two separate divisions - the East Highlands line and the Wynnton line. The dividing point was 17th Street. Rose Hill received buses by September 1st of the same year. The substitution of buses on Rose Hill came later than the belt line because of the weakened condition of the underground cable. The 1924 accomplishment of burying these cables was another nail in the coffin of Columbus streetcars because in Wynnton it was not considered feasible to replace the cables. Arrangement of the bus schedules made the depot car unnecessary and it was taken off also at this time. The East Highland line's new terminus was at Wildwood Drive and 17th Street, with transfers being issued there for buses of the Wynnton Circuit.⁵⁵

In its last year of complete operation the belt line ran from Broad down 10th Street to 10th Avenue, turning towards the north, the track crossed what is now an occupied block and crossed Wynnton Road at Adair Street. After crossing Wynnton, the tracks followed the present Bradley Drive. Turning slightly in front of the office of the Muscogee County School District, the line started up Wynn's Hill on the south side of the extension of Buena Vista Road. The location of the track was engineered in such a way as to provide the small steam engines used when the line was opened with as much traction as possible for the climb up the hill. The small turn at the bottom gave them a running start. Coming out at the intersection of Wynnton and Buena Vista Roads, the line turned and followed the north side of Wynnton Road to Wynnton elementary School. Turning to the left it went down Wildwood Avenue and crossed 17th Street. Continuing on Wildwood, the tracks crossed Garrard Street, Cherokee Avenue, and ran directly across the site of St. Elmo Elementary School, where the Wildwood Station was located. The line then continued down 17th Avenue to 18th Street and on towards town. After crossing 10th Avenue the tracks ran parallel to the Southern Railway and went down Linwood Boulevard past the old Claflin School to 5th Avenue. Taking a left then a right onto 15th Street, the line finally returned to Broad.⁵⁶

A contract of June 23, 1932 between the city of Columbus and the Georgia Power Company subsidiary, the Columbus Transportation Company, called for abandonment of all remaining streetcar lines in the city except for the North Highlands line, with buses taking over all former streetcar routes. By July 1st the East Highlands line and the remaining lines below 9th Street were a thing of the past. Some track was left in place in the southern part of the city due to the difficulty in having it removed. All other, however, was immediately taken up. Any electric poles still standing for streetcar services were disposed of.⁵⁷

On July 31, 1934 the city commission of Columbus granted permission to the Georgia Power Company and the Columbus Transportation Company to conduct a 90 day test of the use of buses on the North Highlands streetcar line. The test came about as a result of requests by the companies to the commission and also by petitions received bearing between 500 and 600 signatures of people living in the area served.⁵⁸ The cars and lines were to be kept in good condition, and if the bus service was found to be unsatisfactory streetcars would resume their schedule.⁵⁹

At the end of the test period the people of North Highlands and Bibb City were satisfied with the replacement.⁶⁰ The morning of Sunday, August 5, 1934 saw the end of the life of streetcars in Columbus.⁶¹

The final farewell to the streetcar era in Columbus came with the razing of the transfer station in May 1941. In that year a permit was granted to the Williams Lumber Company for the erection of a new one story structure. Being located on the site of the original station, the new building provided comforts and functions in much the same way as its predecessor did.⁶² It is indeed sad that such a structure could not have been spared, since the station that replaced it is now gone also. Today there are few reminders of the once-prominent role streetcars played in the day-to-day life of Columbus. To a lucky few who actually rode them, they are memories.

COLUMBUS AND MUSCOGEE COUNTY IN 1860

By

John S. Lupold

Despite its youth--only three decades removed from a frontier environment--Columbus, on the eve of the Civil War, had become one of the South's leading urban, industrial centers. With 9,621 inhabitants, it ranked third among Georgia towns (behind Savannah and Augusta) and fifteenth among those cities that joined the Confederacy. The municipality was the dominant feature of Muscogee County (16,584 total population), the third most populous county in the state.

One of the counties created from the Creek Indians' final land cession to Georgia, Muscogee (1826) initially reached from the Flint River to the Chattahoochee River. The state legislature reduced Muscogee's large domain (from 2,000 to 223 square miles [142,720 acres]) by establishing new counties: most of Harris (1827), Talbot (1827), Taylor (1852) and Chattahoochee (1854); as well as portions of Marion (1827), Macon (1837), and Schley (1857) were formed from lands originally in Muscogee County.

The county's population in 1860 lived in three areas: 1) the city of Columbus which had been established in 1828 by the state as a "trading town" at the head of navigation on the Chattahoochee River; 2) the suburb of Wynnton immediately east of the city; and 3) the rural areas of the county to the north, east, and south of the more urbanized core. (The latter are shown in the census as Shingle Hill; New District; Eight, Ninth, and Tenth Districts; and Upper Town.)

1860 MUSCOGEE COUNTY POPULATION STATISTICS

| | WHITES | SLAVES | FREE BLACKS | TOTAL POPULATION |
|-----------------------|--------|--------|----------------|---------------------|
| CITY OF COLUMBUS | 5,933 | 3,547 | 141 | 9,621 |
| WYNNTON | 557 | 912 | 28 | 1,497 |
| RURAL AREAS OF COUNTY | 2,476 | 2,986 | 4 | 5,466 |
| TOTALS, MUSCOGEE CO. | 8,966 | 7,445 | 173 | 16,584 |

The City's population was densely concentrated within a limited space. Resembling a rectangle nestled against the irregular banks of the Chattahoochee River on the west and south, the town limits only extended seventeen blocks north to south and ten blocks east to west. The number of building lots for houses and businesses was further circumscribed by a strip of unoccupied, but attractive commons land which surrounded the city on three sides.

Many Columbusites lived on the hills of Wynnton. Its elevation made it cooler in the summer with fewer mosquitos and, therefore, healthier. By 1860, this village and the surrounding acres contained some of the area's finest homes--set on "suburban" estates--as well as small farms, the county poor house, and a statistically large group of free blacks. The 1860 census ranked Wynnton, with a total population of 1,497, as Georgia's fifteenth largest town, even though it remained unincorporated.

A third of the county's population lived in a rural setting on farms or plantations (of which there were very few) or in cross-roads hamlets with a country store and perhaps a grist mill. At least one of the latter, the village of Upatoie, was larger and more significant, since it also served as a stop on the Muscogee Railroad which ran east-west through the county connecting Fort Valley with Columbus.

In terms of its ethnic composition and its social and cultural institutions, Columbus was a typical southern fall-line city (similar to Montgomery, Macon, Augusta, and Columbia). Blacks composed 46 percent of Muscogee County's inhabitants and 38 percent of all Columbusites. Of the 1,972 free families within the county, 762 owned slaves. Thus, approximately 40 percent of the white families owned slaves, a slightly higher percentage than the state-wide average, 37 percent. Of those slaveowners, 16 percent (119) owned only one slave, 50 percent (381) had less than six slaves, and 69 percent (424) less than 10. Only 17 "masters" possessed more than 50 slaves, and only two had more than 100. Despite the presence of a large urban area, the percentages of ownership for Muscogee County were almost identical to those for the entire state.

The other "ethnic" groups within the county (probably all within Columbus) were the 652 foreign-born individuals. Over 70 percent of Georgia's foreign-born lived in urban areas, more in Savannah (40 percent) and Augusta (15 percent), than in Macon (6 percent), Atlanta (5 percent) or Columbus (5 percent). The census failed to enumerate the number of each ethnic group within each city. If Columbus had a representative sample of the state's total, then about 350 first-generation Irish, 150 Germans, and 50 English resided within the county. Many of those Germans were probably Jewish; during the 1850s they had established a synagogue, which the 1860 census failed to cite.

During the 1830s, travelers to Columbus had noted the lingering effects of the frontier: desperadoes living in Indian territory in Alabama, frequent duels, and the open sale in drug stores of an almost infinite variety of knives. By 1860, however, the city possessed many of the amenities of a more urbane society: private schools, a girl's orphanage, a Lyceum (educational) society, a temperance group, a Y. M. C. A., a chess club, five masonic lodges, other fraternal orders, and traveling shows that ranged from serious drama to German comedians and Chinese jugglers. The county, according to the census, supported twelve churches (5 methodist, 3 Baptist, 2 Presbyterian, 1 Episcopal, and 1 Roman Catholic) which claimed a combined seating capacity of 11,000. Even so, newspaper editors lamented the lack of a public library, of regular cultural events, and of any public parks.

COLUMBUS

In 1860, the city contained four hotels and five restaurants. At least one 1853 visitor, Frederick Law Olmstead (who later in the decade began designing Central Park in New York City), found the accommodations in Columbus less than desirable and the town a bit uncivilized. He observed in The Cotton Kingdom: "I had seen in no place, since I left Washington, so much gambling, intoxication, and cruel treatment of servants in public, as in Columbus. This, possibly, was accidental; but I must caution persons, travelling for health or pleasure, to avoid stopping in the town. The hotel in which I lodged was disgustingly dirty; the table revolting; the waiters stupid, inattentive, and annoying. It was the stage-house; but I was informed that the other public-house was no better. There are very good inns at Macon, and at Montgomery, Alabama; and it will be best for an invalid proceeding from Savannah westward, if possible, not to spend a night between these towns."

Olmsted admitted that some of the social disruption probably stemmed from the numerous unemployed workers. A flood had washed out the dam and temporarily idled the mills. The river and cotton formed the two major ingredients in the City's economic evolution. From the inception of the city, cotton from outlying regions (half-way to Montgomery, half-way to Macon, and as far north as Fulton County) came by wagon or boat to Columbus warehouses. In turn, cotton factors shipped the staple down the Chattahoochee to Apalachicola and on to world markets. The arrival of the railroads in the region in the 1850s drastically reduced river traffic; most cotton shipments after 1853 went by rail to Savannah. Planters living east of Columbus sent their product directly to the port city. The new railroad net and the subsequent rise of Atlanta diminished the commercial importance of Columbus.

Farmers within Muscogee County in 1860 still carted their cotton and other crops to Columbus. Encompassing 48 percent of the total land area within the county, these farms produced nearly 7,000 (400 lb.) bales of cotton, 225,000 bushels of corn, smaller quantities of other grains, livestock, dairy products, beeswax, and honey.

Planters and farmers from Muscogee and other counties served as important customers for the city's eight cotton brokers and for the numerous mercantile establishments. The city directory of 1859-60 listed 46 grocers, 26 dry goods merchants, 14 bars (three with billiard salons), three slave dealers, three music stores, two gun-smiths, two book stores, 32 law firms, and 25 physicians, but only one bank. The county's most distinctive feature was its industries whose overall production ranked tenth within the South in 1860. The value of the products of Muscogee's sixteen manufacturing establishments in 1860 totaled almost $1.5 million, the highest per factory output of any southern county. These facilities operated on a larger scale than most of their regional competitors, especially the textile mills: Clapp's Factory, Coweta Falls (later Muscogee) Factory, and the Eagle Mills (which had just absorbed the Howard Factory). Together they fabricated more cotton and woolen goods than any southern county or city except Richmond.

Three large-scale grist mills--City, Empire, and Palace--processed and marketed flour, grits, corn meal, and feeds. Smaller operations manufactured boots and shoes, carriages, cotton gins, iron and tin works, steam engines, and paper. A total of 955 people (43 percent women) worked in the county's industries. The textile mills employed 407 laborers (61 percent women). Many of these people, particularly the textile operatives, where children as young as nine years old.

In 1860, the county and city were poised on the eve of their most heroic era. Hundreds of men from Muscogee County would leave to fight in the war; many never returned. With its trained labor force and broad industrial base, the production of Columbus's factories rapidly expanded after the conflict began. The town's prosperity attracted farmers who found employment in the new enterprises, as the city's population grew to 15,000. By 1865, Columbus's industrial contribution to the Confederacy ranked second only to Richmond. In one of the final acts of the war, Union cavalry troops burned all these factories, except the grist mills. Finally, the arrival of the Federal army meant freedom for almost half of the inhabitants of Muscogee County.

BOOK REVIEW

By

Callie B. McGinnis

Columbus, Geo., From its Selection as a "Trading Town" in 1827, To Its Partial Destruction by Wilson's Raid, in 1865. History--Incident--Personality. Part I--1827 to 1846; Part II--1846 to 1865. John H. Martin, compiler. Columbus, GA: Thos. Gilbert, 1874-75; reprint ed. Easley, SC: Georgia Genealogical Reprints, 1972. 366p.

Columbus, Geo., From Its Selection as a "Trading Town"..., the first published history of Columbus was written by John Hawkins Martin, an inveterate newspaperman. Born in Raleigh, North Carolina, in 1818, Martin held a variety of newspaper jobs in his home state, Alabama, and Arkansas before moving to Columbus in 1855.¹

Around 1856 he became the editor of the Columbus Daily Enquirer, a position he held for nearly seventeen years. In 1873, when the Enquirer was sold, Martin assumed editorship of the Sun and Times. Shortly afterwards, when that paper merged with the Enquirer, he became editor of the new Enquirer Sun. He resigned this position in 1875 and served for a few years as editor of the Columbus Daily Times before moving to Atlanta, where he worked for the Atlanta Journal. Martin died in 1900 and is buried with his wife and children in Oakland Cemetery in Atlanta.²

Sometime around 1873, Martin was commissioned by Thomas Gilbert, Columbus' most prominent printer, to do a history of the city. Martin went about the task using the tools of his trade: newspapers. His research involved going through backfiles of the Columbus Enquirer, pulling out details of significant events, as well as biographical information, and announcements of marriages and deaths.

His work originally came out in two separate volumes; the first published in 1874, covering the years 1827 to 1846, and the second, published in 1875, covering the years 1846 to 1865. The book was reprinted in 1972 by Georgia Genealogical Reprints, under the direction of the Reverend Silas Emmett Lucas of Easley, South Carolina.

John Martin was a newspaperman, not a historian. He did not set out to write a flowing narrative history of Columbus. Rather, he "compiled" a history which is more of a chronology. Each chapter looks at a year in Columbus' past, highlighting the major events--elections, fires, murders, etc. Martin closes each chapter with a list of selected marriages and deaths that occurred during the year.

For the most part, Martin presents the facts surrounding the events as they were reported, with little editorial comment. At the end of Volume II, however, he does insert an article on present day (i. e., 1875) Columbus, in which he lauds the city's progress and paints a rosy picture in hopes of attracting outside capital to the area. Also at the end of Volume II are other pieces on Wilson's Raid, the history of Masonry in Columbus, Lover's

Leap, and an excerpt from Thomas Woodward's "Reminiscences of the Creek or Muscogee Indians."

A major problem that Martin encountered in compiling his history was an incomplete set of Enquirer backfiles. He himself admits this in his introduction. To solve this problem, he did look through issues of the Macon Messenger for the missing years, but this paper did not report Columbus news in detail. Consequently, Martin's backfile problem renders his history less than complete for certain years.³

For genealogists, the major flaw in Martin's history is its lack of an index. The book does include a chapter by chapter index (more like a table of contents) to selected events, but this does not include personal names. The Button Gwinnett Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution, Columbus, Georgia, put out two personal name indexes to Martin's history in the 1930s and 50s. These indexes, however, are in typescript format, and are not widely available.⁴

In 1988, Alvie L. Davidson of Lakeland, Florida, compiled the first published index to Martin's history.⁵ Davidson's work is a boon to genealogists. It too, however, is a "personal-names-only" index. One day perhaps another industrious indexer will do a comprehensive index that includes place names, corporate bodies, and general subjects, along with personal names. There are many facts about Columbus that are "buried" in the Martin book, such as the fact that Columbus felt two earthquakes: one in 1841, the other in 1843. Without a subject index, such incidents can only be discovered by browsing.

John Martin's history is a valuable source for individuals searching for their antebellum Columbus roots. Using it, with the aid of the Davidson index, the researcher may discover a marriage announcement for a couple whose marriage record was destroyed in the 1838 Muscogee County Courthouse fire. Or one may discover that a Columbus ancestor was elected to public office. This import duo -- Martin and Davidson -- should be in every library that collects Georgiana and/or southern genealogical materials.

A final word of advice for researchers planning to use Martin's history: remember how the author compiled the book. He used newspapers. In essence, the book is a crude, selective index to the Columbus Enquirer. The researcher who finds an ancestor mentioned in Martin's work should not stop there, but go back to the original newspaper article, which may provide more details, names and clues for further research.

QUERIES

BROOM (BROOME, BROWN): David (Daniel) Daniel Washington Broom married Sabrina Ann Bailey 26 May 1844 (his second marriage) in Columbus, GA. He probably had his first wife with him when he arrived in Georgia. What happened to her? What was her name? Early records often list these people under the name of "Brown." KENT: The 1850 Census of Muscogee Co., GA shows Sarah (Ann) Kent, 56, living with her (presumed) dau.-in-law, Susan C. McDuffie, 32. Among the children listed is my ggm Francis (the "i" is correct) C. Kent, 11. Was Sarah the mother or grandmother of Francis? Who was Francis' father? Francis was from Girard, AL. Will pay $25.00 to the first person with the documented answer to each of the four questions above. Robert M. Mayo, 3364 Sycamore Drive, Baton Rouge, LA 70805.

31ST GEORGIA VOLUNTEER INFANTRY--CSA. I am seeking copies of unpublished soldier letters, war stories, photographs, etc., of any man that served with the 31st Georgia, a regiment comprised chiefly of recruits from Muscogee and neighboring counties. Prominent Columbus citizens serving with this regiment include Pleasant J. Philips, Rudolphus T. Pride, Apollos Forrester, Edward W. Clapp, and Charles S. Shorter. I will pay for all costs incurred due to copying and postage. Materials are needed for a published history of the 31st Georgia. Greg White, 3094 Willis Street, Smyrna, GA 30080.

RAY-WEATHERS-HARRIS-BARREE-LEE. Martha Ray was b. 9 Jul 1819 in Lincoln County, GA and d. 7 Aug 1898 in Fayette County, TX. She was the daughter of Wilson Ray. Was her mother Polly Weathers? She was married 18 Nov 1841 in Muscogee County, GA to James M. Harris who was b. in Greene County, GA. Who were his parents? After Martha arrived in Texas, she was married in Bastrop County, TX on 3 May 1857 to Emanuel Barree. She later married around 1868 to Nelson Lee. William Harris was a private in Hood's Brigade of Texas during the Civil War. Was he a son of Martha (Ray) and James M. Harris of Fayette County, TX. William was b. 1841 in Muscogee County, GA.
